If I can remove the use of pot from my life, then I will be more free to express my opinions on the Internet since ~~there~~ it will be more difficult to just "grab me".

What if dangerous people with power in our world decide to investigate into who Gortucio is and come to find he is manic depressive and holed up in an apartment all day spouting off on the Internet and doing research for "News"? I have to be prepared for some hassles if I want to be vocal. Perhaps it is better if I am less vocal.

Will more activity on the Internet help me get through probation (by giving me a healthy way to invest my energies and enjoy my brain) OR will it hurt my chances since the State apparatus is all connected?

Do I know what world I am in?

Do I need these fuckers to grab hold of me and display their Power?

2005.07.21 I remember reading this in "The H Files" recording 2015

Let's get one thing straight: The prison system, inherently unjust and inhumane, is the ultimate expression of injustice and inhumanity in the society at large. Those of us on the outside do not like to think of wardens and guards as our surrogates, yet they are. And they are intimately locked in a deadly embrace with their human capture behind the prison walls. By extension, so are we.

A terrible double meaning is thus imparted to the original question of human ethics:
"Am I my brother's keeper?"

Can TV personality police really believe they are fighting the "bad guys"? Let's not get lost in questions like that. Some of these personalities drawn to police work, prosecution, judging, etc are really drawn to power and possessed by the Will To Power, the power to apprehend and contain, detain whatever human organism on the planet that they want to.

Do I know who I am? Have I figured it out?

While it is understandably tempting to rely on a substance to "ease us through the human experience", there is no denying that the risk of incarceration is not worth the pleasure - Besides, the pleasure becomes a "demand" that actually ends up causing more grief than it is worth.

In a land of abundance, where it grew wild, it still might be harmful for a human organism to become too attached to the Gift the Plant Provides.

I can stop this crazy train. I can take the power out of the State's hands (at least as far as urine analyses go) if I keep it clean.

And should I successfully keep finding ways to resist the demands for "stress relief" via ~~the~~ weed, may I even more strongly be on guard against alcohol dependency.

2005.07.21

Should I find myself in trouble due to too much public writing, then I will plead my case:

"Gentleman, this system I live under makes billions of dollars off of poor folks year in year out, for generations! Surely we live in a sophisticated age with a tremendous amount of psychological insight into human behavior. When I repress my drive to write, I quickly regress into a state pattern of behavior that is self-destructive. It is for my mental health that I write!"

"What would you have me do, drunk myself to death?"

Anyway, things moved slowly from there... until, by the time
I was moving strong in 1999, we were at 28Kbps - and now - in 2005, dial-up is still ^{using} only 56Kbps ~~modems~~

That's what I used all through Rutgers ~~and~~ and while camping out in my mother's basement from May 2002 to October 2003. Then it was nothing but Blue

Mondays for months at the Ashbury Park library one hour per day - that slowed me down - and the hard street substances there had me struggling just to be able to USE MY BRAIN as something other than a mechanism to feel deep pleasure (which turns instantly into dread and despair - even horror and terror). I escaped from all that when I stayed at Habcore in Red Bank.

There I kept my computer so I was able to do much work from my little room and work for 3 hours per day in the Red Bank library (1 hour each session separated by at least 1 hour).
I used to make a whole day of it several days in a row when I got out of "program" due to scabies infestation.

I got more done in Red Bank than I did in Ashbury Park, but I left Red Bank because the program I went to (CPC right here in Aberdeen) was a torture chamber for me. I have a mood disorder, but my brain is otherwise quite sharp! Thanks,

2005.07.21

But NO THANKS. I sabotaged my residence there - getting drunk, prussing on the wall under Heather's window.

What a strange yet memorable trip that was!

When I got to the flame motel, NO MORE MEALS,
NO MORE RED BANK LIBRARY, NO MORE COMPUTER, and (at least one good negative) NO MORE
"program in Aberdeen", just the psychiatrist.
He was the one who wrote that I have no insight into my substance abuse problem.

And yet I do.

I am just stubborn - that's all.

So an entire year at the Flame Motel - April 2004 to March 2005:

cable tv, heat/A.C, shower, microwave,
no stores, a bus to Asbury, a bus to Freehold.
I used to ride a bicycle into Freehold to use the shitty old computer at the Freehold Boro Library until I discovered the machines and DSL connection over at Check Mate in Boro Plaza.

I would ride in when I had the energy,
after all, I had no money whatsoever.

So it was slow going even though I hit 'em pretty steady and fairly hard. In March, when I got back to Asbury Park, I accelerated,

By now I had a computer my nephew had lent me. He is now using it in my mom's basement in Freehold. I was using it since Winter - like around Christmas or after that. It was Christmas we gave the Cruz family the old computer with Windows 95.

Nito, Hector, Alexis, Christian, and Angel! NAAHC... I gave Alexis a scientific calculator, Nito has Derive, the last thing I gave them was a huge dictionary. Precious Gifts... from the heart.

So I hit 'em hard on the Internet from Asbury Park New Jersey - steady - every single day up until the last couple of weeks when twice the same cop frisked me for "weapons: grenades, wmd → chemical/biological". I was shocked and frightened. (March + April)

I stopped posting for over a month, and I only just recently returned a couple weeks ago to confront this "Captain Church" (Captain Crunch). Then, suddenly, goitbusters went down for some migration to simpli.biz ??? - been down since before July 10th... I wonder if it will be ~~a~~ RELAUNCHED by the time I log on to the Net as xHentrich → xhentrich

Supposedly, "the pleasure-seeking drives of my organism" experience the calm effects of smoking marijuana always on the silent, unspeakable level of reality - always in the present, always THE NOW. There is no such thing as time. It is always the now. We spatialize time into blocks, but this is not reality.

A complex inner struggle takes place between the conflicts: Reason declares that the threat of probation threatening my freedom (in that marijuana traces in urine constitute a criminal offense) is enough to galvanize the neocortex into action where it monitors the patterns of the images and desires ~~created~~ coming from the subcortical regions (the ~~des~~ pleasure-seeking, life affirming drives of the organism).

The neocortex converts these desires into images and even articulates them. Listen for those voices - they're generated by your own brain - actually, by a higher brain decoding raw data from a lower brain.

The LINKSYS 4 port Broadband Ethernet Cable/DSL Router requires to be connected to a DSL modem/router that is connected to DSL.

model: BEFSR41

price: $60

catalog: 25-3020

The BEFSR11 is equivalent to the Westell 2200, no?

I should have named Diary #89 "DSL Router"!

Another option is the D-LINK SWITCH. (DSS 5+)

It's got 5 10/100BASE TX ports. $30

You see, the syslink 4 port router still requires the DSL Router/modem, but - as long as I don't need a network, I really most likely won't need the router (LINKSYS 4 port). I most likely can STILL by-pass the Verizon Software CD Set Up. ^{1 port}

The Westell 2200, model A90-220015-04, is a DSL Router. It even has that written on the bottom. It has one port. It will do the PPPoE, no?

These are ALSO DSL modems. They are intelligent autosensing routers/modems.

It - the Westell 2200 modem/router is a router and network address translator. One could fashion a link box to serve as a router/firewall by plugging into NICs...

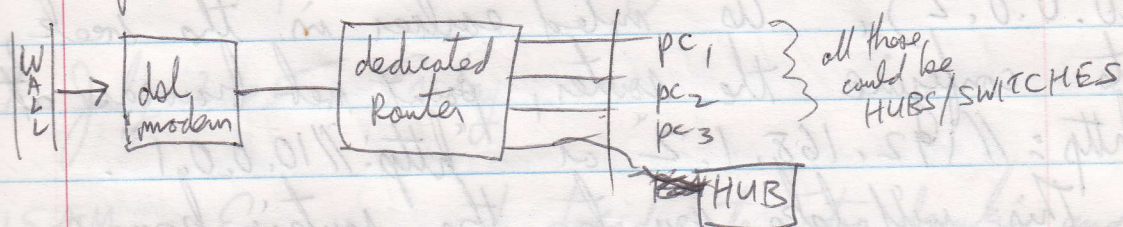

But that's a whole 'nother notebook - a project for an old man if I live that long.

X

The beautiful thing about the Internet is the amount of technical information right at your fingertips. It is priceless. Looking at different models of devices can be confusing.

Routers come in two basic types: dedicated router and router with an integrated DSL modem.

A dedicated router has 4 ports and serves as a switch and firewall - and it requires a DSL modem.

The combo router/modems have the benefit of allowing alleviating your system from all software and hardware that is normally needed to connect. This frees up system resources, and lets the router handle all the connection nitty-gritty.

Like I said, an ethernet modem is needed to complement the dedicated routers.

The Westell Wisppeed could very well be the number one modem. It is an "ethernet modem" ~~and~~ (on bottom of box → DSL ROUTER).

Under network properties, ^{TCP/IP} NIC should be set to AUTOMATICALLY OBTAIN IP ADDRESS (aka DHCP). Routers generally ~~serve~~ ^{act} as DHCP servers, and you will be assigned your IP address in this manner by the router itself.

The router will get the "real" IP address assigned by BSIS. Then reboot machine (computer).

You should get an IP address from the router now, and be on its network (192.168.1.2 or 10.0.0.2). As noted earlier in the week, to configure the router, point web browser at "http://192.168.1.2" or "http://10.0.0.1". This will take you to the router's home page.

http://launchmodem or http://192.168.1.254
Note: You won't be able to access the Westell interface if it is connected in conjunction with ~~the~~ another router (such as the Linksys 4 port router). Routers cannot forward a local 192.168.xxx.xxx address to another network device.

"Therapists" would have me cutting down trees for a living since that's what I did for the park service, and yet why did I perform so well at Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, if only to find myself performing manual labor?

Tomorrow I plan on going to Freehold. I will visit some folks. I wonder what ever happened to Old Maccloud?

"I don't wanna be anything other than me!"

I wonder where I can buy my father a gift? I could use some socks, too. There may be somewhere in town... I won't get my hopes up concerning Nati. After all, by now I can tell that I am a skinny old dude with rotten teeth and losing my hair. How grotesque - Nati would not want me groping all over her... I have to get humble and develop a better sense of humour. I have been a foolish man. I'll get over it.

2005.08.09

Why am I still thinking about drinking beer tonight?
Is it the music I downloaded?

American Psycho II? I Don't Wanna Be?
Leave Dat Boy Alone? What gives? (I'm a psycho)
"I can fuck the culture up (and probably rap)
a manicure with anxiety attacks..."

So, will I be getting some Jesus Juice or what?

7:23 PM - I log onto freespeech.org to post poems and I get a phone call - they hang up on me. Everytime I go to post, this happens.
I think I will have that drink,
after all...

6:30 PM I am tempted to create a copy of the music I burned from the Internet and present it to Nati as a peace offering... why?
1. Something Wicked This Way Comes (TLC)
2. Man In The Mirror (Michael Jackson)
3. Change Your Heart (Beck)
4. Bold As Love (Jimi Hendrix)

noon (11 Aug) It is just as well that Alphonse is not female. Now I can stay focused on what I am doing rather than be sidetracked. I am going to ~~be~~ continue reading H.G. Wells "When The Sleeper Wakes".

I am not looking forward to installing a multiboot system on my nephew's computer, but I will carry in my napsack the SuSE installation CD's.

2005 I am "running a little late" getting into Freshhold. I wonder if I even want to go ... I will go to the CVS, visit Jose Samhago at Ed's, visit Nate at Sam's ... look for a gift for my pops ...

I missed the 1:40 PM train to Red Bank. It is now 2:15 PM. Will I also miss the 2:40 PM train? I should leave within 5 minutes ... or at least by 2:25!

12 August 1:30 AM

It is only a matter of time before I kill myself.
